

Discussion game: Moral mazes

Influence a child's home-learning beyond the work set by their teacher! Discussion games can have a hugely positive impact on a learner's vocabulary and communication skills.

This activity sheet aims to provide you with a series of subjects and reflection points to provoke a fun and lively discussion.

Share your home-learning!

Use the hashtag
#DYThomelearning to share your child's work.

driver youth trust

for literacy

The questions below have no 'right' or 'wrong' answer. If you're doing the activity with two people, try assigning one person to argue 'yes' and the other person to argue 'no'.

If you're working in a group, you can discuss both sides of the argument all together, or split the group in two and allocate a 'side' to each team.

If you think your friend's new haircut is ugly, would you tell them?

What if it's your teacher?

What if it's your mum?

Would you experiment on an animal if it led to a cure for cancer?

What if the animal was a clone?

What if it was a puppy?

If you dropped your phone would you return it to the phone saying it's faulty?

What if the shop assistant had been rude to you?

You find a £20 note outside a shop. No one is around - what do you do?

What if you see someone searching their pockets nearby?

You see the answers to a test on your teacher's desk. Do you look at them?

Do you tell your classmates?

You've won £1million, but to collect it a member of your family has to leave the country.

Do you take the money? Who do you send abroad?